Job Description

The Indigenous Peer Support Worker draws on lived experience, cultural knowledge, and peer based practice to support Indigenous women to connect with their cultural identity and recover from addiction. This role provides emotional, cultural, practical, and community oriented support in a manner that is non judgmental, inclusive, and rooted in traditional Indigenous teachings.

This position supports day to day household routines, contributes to a safe and stable home environment, assists with culturally grounded programming, and helps residents navigate challenges through active listening, relational practice, and non violent communication.

Qualifications

- Lived/living experience with recovery and wellness, including a minimum of 2-3 years of recovery if applicable
- Knowledge of Indigenous healing practices, ceremonies, teachings, and cultural protocols
- ALR Training Certificate - Implementing BC’s Supportive Recovery Standards
- Foundational Skills for the Substance Use, Treatment, and Recovery Workforce Certificate

- Basic counselling, peer support, or frontline support experience
- Familiarity with non violent communication, trauma responsive care, intersectionality, and anti oppression frameworks
- Ability to maintain accurate documentation using Windows re: Outlook, Word, and Teams
- Emergency First Aid & Naloxone Training - Community Care
- Food Safe
- Class 5 Driver's License
- Criminal Records Check

Chrysalis is committed to diversity and equity in its programming and workforce. We specifically welcome and encourage Indigenous women and women of colour to apply and women of all backgrounds, ethnicities, and cultures. The wisdom, expertise & diverse perspectives from lived experiences relating to Living in Community's work are respected, valued & sought.

As a provider of bed-based homes for women healing from and/or vulnerable to and/or at ongoing risk of male-perpetrated violence, hiring preference is given to women, as per Section 41 of the Human Rights Code. Chrysalis acknowledges and respects men as important allies with whom meaningful partnerships are imperative and engage with them in capacities that constructively support and promote our constitutional purpose and functions.
